No plans to change Aadhaar card design: Govt

NEW DELHI: The Press Information Bureau (PIB) on Sunday dismissed recent media reports and social media claims suggesting that the Aadhaar card will undergo a major redesign by the end of this year, limiting it to just a photograph and a QR code. In an official statement posted on X, the PIB described such reports as incorrect and urged the public to ignore them to avoid unnecessary confusion. "There are intermittent news reports and social media posts explaining how Aadhaar's look may change by the end of this year to just a photo and a QR code, alone. This is NOT CORRECT. There is no plan for any such changes," the PIB said. The clarification comes amid recurring online discussions and news articles that have speculated about a stripped-down version of the 12-digit unique identification document issued by the Unique Identification Authority of India (UIDAI).

Aadhaar ‘New Look’ Claims Baseless, No Change Planned: Govt

The Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology on Sunday clarified that there is no proposal to change the existing format of Aadhaar cards to a simplified version featuring only a photograph and QR code.

Responding to a series of media reports and social media posts claiming that Aadhaar would soon get a “new look”, the Ministry said the information is incorrect and has no basis.

Further, it warned that such messages are creating unnecessary confusion among citizens and urged people to rely only on official communications from the Unique Identification Authority of India (UIDAI) through PIB releases and verified social media handles.

The Ministry also advised media platforms not to circulate or amplify unverified claims regarding Aadhaar changes. Citizens have been asked to ignore such rumours and depend strictly on authentic government sources for updates.

No move to replace Aadhaar details with QR code, government clarifies

The Central Government on Sunday clarified that there was no proposal to change the existing Aadhaar card format to one featuring only a photograph and QR code, as suggested in some recent media reports and social media posts.

Reports circulating online claiming that Aadhaar’s design may be revised by the end of the year are “not correct” and have no official basis. The government stated that said, “Such news reports and social media posts are creating unwanted confusion in the minds of the people”.

Notably, some media reports had claimed that the government was planning to redesign the Aadhaar card to display only a photograph and a QR code, with personal details such as the Aadhaar number, address, date of birth and gender no longer being printed on it.

The statement said that it has been advised that people should not rely on unverified reports or social media posts regarding Aadhaar. Instead, they should refer only to official communications issued by the Unique Identification Authority of India (UIDAI) through its verified social media handles and press releases from the Press Information Bureau (PIB).

This is NOT CORRECT. There is no plan for any such changes." The ministry flagged that such reports have been circulating across media platforms and social media, creating confusion among citizens. It said, "Such news reports and social media posts are creating unwanted confusion in the minds of the people."
